Staying Connected

During this challenging time, Uproar will be sent to our subscribers weekly. On Fridays, be sure to check your inbox for updates and links to opportunities to stay connected with resources at the University.

Stay up to date on the University's response to COVID-19 at coronavirus.princeton.edu.

News

Princeton's President-emerita Shirley Tilghman joined with other statewide leaders to encourage social distancing. Read the op-ed on nj.com.

Dr. Evan Garfein '92 shares how his experience as a student athlete helps him fight COVID-19 in New York City. Read the interview on goprincetontigers.com.

Through the magic of Zoom, student in John McPhee's legendary course were joined by a special guest on their first day of digital classes. Read the article on princeton.edu.

Princeton and Carnegie Mellon researchers developed a new mathematical model to effectively track the spread of epidemics. Read the article on princeton.edu.

Stay Engaged
Do your part to "flatten the curve" by staying home. Here's a list of podcasts, videos, blogs and more to keep you engaged during the lockdown.

Don't Miss Next Week
Laura F. Edwards of Duke University presents a virtual workshop on her new book project, "Only the Clothes on Her Back: Law, Textiles, and Commerce in the Nineteenth-Century United States." RSVP required, email AMStudies@princeton.edu. Monday, March 30 at 12:00 pm.

The Art Museum will host an online panel discussion titled Painting the Mountains: Cézanne's Rock and...
Find Collaborative Listening Project playlists on Spotify.

Politics and Polls is one of many Princeton University podcasts.

Politics and Polls is one of many Princeton University podcasts.

Find Collaborative Listening Project playlists on Spotify.

Our African American Studies Podcast acts as a conversation around the field of African American Studies and the black experience in the 21st century. The podcast focuses on the political, economic, and cultural forces that shape our understanding of race within America. We invite you to listen as we explore outcomes, question dominant discourse, and consider evidence instead of myths. Find out more at aas.princeton.edu.

All for Earth delves into the urgency of today’s environmental crises through in-depth interviews with the people racing time to prevent the implosion of the critical and interconnected systems that support life on Earth, including climate, biodiversity, water security, and food production. Guests represent the worlds of science and technology; politics and government; finance and business; health, media, sports and more. Find out more at allforearth.princeton.edu.

While the Art Museum is temporarily closed to visitors, you can still explore their art collections online. Find out more at artmuseum.princeton.edu.

Dig a little deeper into the books you love to read with The BiblioFiles, Cotsen Children's Library interviews with children's book authors. From award-winning bestsellers to books you might not have heard of (but should definitely check out), listen to what the authors have to say about their creations. Find out more at cotsen.princeton.edu.

Tune into the Collaborative Listening Project and visit a virtual concert hall. Princeton University Concert’s is posting playlists that relate to their current and upcoming seasons on its Spotify page. The first playlist includes pianist Mitsuko Uchida, violinist Benjamin Beilman, pianist Brad Mehldau, and fan-favorite Joyce DiDonato signing "Somewhere Over the Rainbow." Find out more at princetonuniversityconcerts.org.

Listen in on select courses on Coursera at coursera.org/princeton.

End Notes takes you behind the cover and through the pages of books on politics, society, and culture.
policy and more by Princeton University Woodrow Wilson School faculty. Find out more at wws.princeton.edu/news-and-events/woocasts.

A number of the University's public lectures are available on Media Central. Browse the videos at mediacentral.princeton.edu.

Need a March Madness fix? Catch up with the Men's Basketball team on their video series, Hard Cuts. Watch on their Facebook page.

Princeton Alumni Weekly's podcast, cleverly named PAWcast, features interviews with alumni on a range of topics. Find out more at paw.princeton.edu/podcasts.

Politics & Polls unpacks the history of politics and current events in the U.S. Hosted by Julian Zelizer and Sam Wang, the show features some of the best minds in politics, journalism, academia, and even the arts. The result is a respectful, intellectual - and oftentimes fun - debate and discussion. Find our more at politicspolls.princeton.edu.

Princeton Tigers, the official podcast of channel of Princeton University Athletics, offers a range of shows from varsity coaches. Find out more at princetontigers.podbean.com.

After some 50 years of coeducation, the women of Princeton University have roared to the forefront of just about every walk of life. From the Supreme Court to the U.S. Congress; from operating rooms and newsrooms to boardrooms and classrooms; from laboratories, war zones and trading floors to stages, startups and writing desks - Princeton women have penetrating views on things that matter. These are change-makers in the service of humanity. Listen to their stories on SheRoars Podcast. Find out more at sheroarspodcast.princeton.edu.

For Families
Know a teacher, librarian, parent, or friend who is looking for some creative and fun literacy connections? Look no further than Pop Goes the Page. Cotsen Children's Library's fantastic outreach blog full of projects, instructions, helpful hints, and new ideas galore! Check it out at blogs.princeton.edu/popgoesthepage.

Cotsen Children's Library is holding First Draft, a creative writing program open to ages 9-12. Students submit short stories and Cotsen staff provide suggestions and feedback. Read the guidelines at cotsen.princeton.edu.

Princeton University Art Museum offers
A recent project on Pop Goes the Page.

Princeton University Library complied a list of virtual resources for students of all ages. View the list (.pdf).